OUR SENIORS

by Maryann Gurney

We have nine seniors to graduate,
And we think they're simply great.
Each one I will describe for you,
And tell a little about him too.

First there's Betsey, rather tall,
She plays the greatest basketball.
Her ranks in school are near the top,
With everyone she hits the spot.

Gail Mitchell is number two,
With curley hair and eyes of blue.
She can do most anything,
She's nice enough to please a king.

Next is pretty Annette Roy,
We know that Eddie is her boy.
There's one sure thing that you can bet,
She'll be a future homemaker yet.

LeVerne Moody is the friendly type,
And sweet as fruit when it is ripe.
She cheers on our team of eight,
With Maurice she will always rate.

Our Reggie boy is tall, tall, tall,
And you should see him playing ball.
He simply dribbles down the floor,
And ends up With the highest score.

Number six is Dougie, class president,
He participates in almost every event.
From drama club to baseball team,
He's the busiest boy you've ever seen.

Next is Jerry with his flirting ways,
We all cheer for his basketball plays.
He does a lot of mechanical work,
His duties he will never shirk.

Milton is the average type,
With average weight and average height.
He plays ball on out baseball team,
And he thinks that Betty is a dream.

Then there's Richard, tall and slim,
"Wizard" is what we call him.
His acting has gone to his head,
He even wore his tie to bed.

That's all the class right there.
There's no other like it anywhere.
Everything they do or say,
Makes us proud of them "everyway".

ROBERT'S FATE

Three years ago on Sept. 14, 1959, little Robert Cogswell was crippled with a serious bone disease. The disease had spread into his blood and for a year and a half he fought for his life in a hospital bed.

After that year and a half, he began to improve steadily. Today was the day that Robert was going home and tears of happiness filled his eyes as he climbed out of bed and was helped into his clothes. He couldn't walk yet, without his crutches, but he could turn cartwheels on those. Robert visited the balcony of his floor to get some fresh air once in a while but he hadn't set foot on solid ground for three years.

He was thinking about all of this as the nurses finished dressing him. He was thinking of his little sister at home and how nice it would be to be free again and enjoy the great outdoors. But what would his friends think? Would they want to be friends with a cripple? Would they talk to a cripple when they could play football or basketball? All of these things had been churning in Robert's mind since he heard that he was being released. He had a great fear of what might happen on the outside world.

His mother and father arrived early in the afternoon to take him home. His first happiness of the outdoors was overshadowed by the thoughts of how the neighborhood friends were going to act toward him. Or were they his friends any more? These thoughts were running around and around in his mind and bothering him so much that on the way home he broke down and wept. His mother wanted to know what the trouble was but Robert wouldn't tell her.

When they arrived home Robert got out and hobbled up the walk on his crutches. He didn't see a soul around to greet him and that convinced him all the more that no one cared for a cripple. He opened the front door and a bedlam of shouts and yells greeted him. All of his old friends were grouped around a table filled with food for a party. Robert was so surprised and happy that tears of joy filled his eyes as he shook everyone's hands. A worry greater than his sickness had been conquered.

A NEW EXPERIENCE

Morning dawned clear and cold. In the east the sun, a huge glowing ball of red, was shining brightly.

Joan awakened when the blinding light of the sun shone in her window. She yawned cheerfully and quickly hopped out of bed. She dressed hurriedly and left her bedroom, suddenly remembering what day it was. Joan slumped into the nearest chair, shocked at the remembrance that this was her first day at a new school.

Although she knew it wasn't going to be easy, she realized that she had no other choice but to face this new challenge.

Throughout her breakfast, for which she had no appetite, Joan continually worried. She realized that it was foolish to worry but she couldn't help it.

The time to leave had finally come. Joan timidly opened the door of her apartment and walked to the head of the long, narrow flight of stairs. As she walked down the flight of stairs, one hand on the railing and each step creaking under her weight, she trembled slightly at what she knew she must face. As she reached the bottom of the stairs, her landlady, Mrs. Gates, a kind old woman, came from her room to talk to Joan.

"Don't be nervous, Joan," she admonished. "It won't be that bad."

"You're right, Mrs. Gates," she replied. "I was foolish to worry so."

Feeling better after her words with Mrs. Gates, she bade her landlady goodbye and walked along the carpeted hall to the door. She stepped out briskly and felt the cool, pre-autumn chill to the air. The sun shining through the tree-tops warmed her face as she walked down the path to the dirt road in front of the boarding house. Already the morning dew was off the grass, dried by the brilliant sun.

Joan's hopes soared, cheered by the beautiful day. As she walked along the road, a gray squirrel with its long bushy tail scampered across the road and up a tree with it leaves already changing to bright colors. Then when she rounded the turn in the road where the small, ripling brook passed, she could see ahead of her the main road.

The sight of the road ahead of her brought back all her fears of going to the new school. She worriedly hoped that all the students would like her.

Joan walked slowly at the side of the tarred road, the school already in sight. A car passed her slowly, its driver waving to her cheerfully. She returned the wave as she recognized the cars occupant as being a prominent member of the town.

At last, here she was in front of the school, a small but fairly modern building. Small children played gaily outside. High School students were hurrying to get inside for the first day of school. As Joan walked up the path, a lump building in her throat, she was cheered by the pleasant hello of some school girls congregated by the door.

Now, she was finally inside. She walked down the hall and came to the door of her room. She drew a deep breath and grabbed the knob. Joan turned it and opened the door.

Inside the room students gaily chattered and hardly noticed Joan as she entered. She reached her seat and prepared for the start of school.

Suddenly the bell sounded and students scrambled to get to their seats.

Joan sat there nervous and frightened. But when she glanced around the room and saw the warm cheerful faces smiling back at her, all her fears vanished.

She arose from her chair, confidence beaming from her face as she said, "Good morning. I am your new teacher, Miss Hale."

At last Joan had true confidence that she would succeed at her job as a teacher.

HAIL, APPLETON SENIORS!

Thou seniors must surely find
In days of yonder year,
Things you've gained, things you've lost
Things man holds so dear.

What are these ideals so near the hearts of man?
Freedom and equity, morality and law.
This is why your forefathers lived
And this is well worth living for.

Little more can be said
To sum up life's solemn fray
Except, Hail to thee O Appleton seniors
We are behind you all the way!

PROPAGANDA

This is an age of great war machines and super bombs, but oddly enough these weapons are not the most powerful in the world today. Russia has purposely tried to keep the world frightened with boasts of its military might and threats of war while it has been utilizing a different, potent weapon in a war which has already started.

This powerful weapon is propaganda and World War III, up to this point, has been a war of words. So far, it has been a pitifully one-sided war, for the American People who would fight with valor and courage on battlefields for our freedom, have failed to respond to this more subtle offensive by the Communists. This reluctance is easily explained for most people do not realize that the riots and demonstrations taking place against the United States are the planned strategy of Communist agitators specially trained in these tactics. Also, it is in direct opposition to the nature of the American people to try to stir up trouble by subversion and slander.

The use of propaganda and its spectacular effect is exemplified by the "U-2 incident" and by the riots which broke out in South American countries when United States' Dignitaries were visiting there. The spy plane incident was given world wide publicity by the Communists and the United States suffered a great loss in prestige. In South America, crowds which were generally friendly to the United States were converted to frenzied, rock throwing mobs by small groups of Communist agitators.

Our military prowess equals that of Russia so there is no imminent danger of a shooting war, but our power in the field of propaganda is woefully small. It is said that the best defense is a good offense and this is what we must develop. We do not need to cause riots in which innocent people would be harmed, but merely publicize Russia's acts of aggression. We, also, must use propaganda as a weapon, if we are to preserve our great country.

THE COLD WALK HOME

The cold, sharp wind was blowing fiercely with the white, flaky snow falling heavily.

School let out early due to slippery road conditions.

Joanne Walker, a cute, little school girl of six, slowly tied her two books together and tucked them under her ragged coat, dreading the thought of that cold walk home. Joanne lived on a back road, two miles long, oppoite the school yard. The bus was unable to travel this back road in the winter. The road had many severe curves and was in much need of repair.

Joanne decided that standing around wouldn't get her home any sooner. Stepping out into the harsh wind, which slapped her squarely in the face, she began her walk home.

The wet, sticky snow was almost knee deep on little Joanne. She was unable to see more than a few feet in front of her. The wind was blowing against her, forcing blinding snow in her face.

Trudging through the fallen blanket of snow, her foot caught upon something, hurling her into the thick, white mass. Snow now covered her already wind burned face, besides her whole body. Some managed to get inside of her mittens, causing her to yank them off instantly.

Folding her reddened hands together, she tried to work some circulation back into her numb fingers.

Continuing on her way, her eyes felt a stinging sensation and a lily-white tear drop floated down her chapped face.

Finally coming in sight of the little shack which she called home, she gained control of herself and dragging her feet behind her made it to the familiar location.

Although her home wasn't kept up very well, her mother had it warm and inviting. Her mother met her at the door, helped her inside and embraced her tenderly.

Sitting Joanne on the single bed, she unfastened her coat, pulled off her snow-filled boots and laid out some warm, dry clothing for her to crawl into.

Leaving Joanne to change her clothes, her mother went into the other room to heat up some broth.

Returning with the hot broth, she found Joanne stretched out on the bed, half asleep. With little persuading Joanne sipped the hot broth until she struck the bottom of the bowl.

Stretching out on the bed once more, she drifted off into a world of dreams.

On the following two days there wasn't any school. Then the week-end was upon them. By Monday morning the old back road was cleared enough for Joanne to return to school.

That was one walk home Joanne would never forget. She hoped she would never be confronted with another walk home like that one for the rest of her life, and that, she hoped would be a good many years yet.

By Audrey Clark

LAST NIGHT AT MIDNIGHT

Carla Johnson skipped lightly along the path. Tonight was the night she had been looking forward to for a week. She had a date with Roger Princeton, the most popular boy at Central High School. Carla had been hoping for weeks that Roger would ask her for a date and now it was actually happening!

That night, at seven, the doorbell rang. Carla was nervous. After they got started the nervousness slowly ebbed away. They went to the movies and afterwards stopped for something to eat. On the way home Roger turned the radio on. It was twelve o'clock. At that moment, as they went up over the hill, brilliant lights shone in their eyes. They were going to crash. Suddenly the whole world went black for Carla. The last thing she heard was Roger's voice in her ear. It said, "I'm sorry if you're hurt. I love you." Then the blackness surrounded her.

When she came to in the hospital her body ached with pain. She would never walk again. Then she remembered Roger's words. Was Roger all right? She asked the nurse. It seemed an eternity before she said, "He's unconsious. The doctor has little hope for him."

Shivers ran up and down her spine. What if Roger died? Then she knew what she had to do. She closed her eyes and breathed a silent prayer for Roger's life. As she opened her eyes the nurse ran in with good news, Roger had come to. The doctor said he would live. It was a miracle he said. Carla knew it wasn't a miracle. It was her prayer.
